

CONTRIBUTORS

MARCIA CEBULSKI is a second-year graduate student at the Folklore Institute, Indiana University. She received her B. A. in philosophy from Barnard College, Columbia University, and has done sociological research in New York City and Seattle. A native of Chicago and of Polish descent, Miss Cebulski's chief interests are foodways and immigrant folklore. She is also responsible for a successful mummer's play in Bloomington, Christmas, 1971.

Norwegian scholar Ronald GRAMBO is a regular contributor to Abstracts of Folklore Studies, and has published studies of folktales and proverbs. He has previously published a "Note On Alan Dundes's Devolutionary Premise" in Folklore Forum III (1970), 57-58.

ANDREA GREENBERG, a third-year graduate student at the Folklore Institute interested in folk dance and European folklore is a previous contributor to Folklore Forum.

Texan SYLVIA GRIDER is also a graduate student at the Folklore Institute. Miss Grider is presently a Resident Advisor on undergraduate housing on the Indiana University campus. She is interested in Southwestern American folklore and folklife and in American popular culture.

JOHN WILLIAM JOHNSON is presently a graduate student at the Folklore Institute, where he is also an instructor in folklore in the Division of Continuing Education. His B. A. is in German from the University of Texas, and he has an M. Phil. from the School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, in Somali oral literature. Mr. Johnson has published several articles on Somali language and literature, and now has a book in press.

W. EDSON RICHMOND needs no introduction to Forum readers. Richmond is professor of English and Folklore at Indiana University. Dr. Richmond is a noted ballad and dialect scholar, and has published widely. His current project is a type index of medieval Scandinavian ballads.

WILLIAM J. SAMARIN is a professor of anthropology and linguistics at the University of Toronto, Canada. Samarin has his Ph. D. from the University of California, and has written two important books: Field Linguistics (1967), and Tongues of Men and Angels (1972). He is former Chairman of the Committee on Languages and Linguistics, African Studies Association.

JOHN M. VLACH is a co-editor of the Forum. A third-year graduate student at the Folklore Institute, his interests encompass African and Afro-American folklore, material culture, and oral literature.